

IT/IP Team

Brian Auld

Brian Auld was admitted as a solicitor in 1983 and is the partner in charge of the Banbury Company Commercial Department.

Brian has previously worked for the European Commission and as an in house Lawyer for Toshiba, Racal and Nortel.

His experience covers sale/purchase of businesses and commercial contracts (including IT, copyright, trademark and other licences).

Kate Ollis

For the nearly 10 years Kate has acted as a corporate commercial solicitor working with all sizes of businesses from start ups through to long established companies.

For many years Kate has specialised in commercial work for IT and technology companies and has been able to use her own interest in technology and science to allow her to meet with her clients with either an understanding of the practical issues or an open mind to learn.

As a team we have acquired an understanding of various technology based or technology enhanced industries and the business and legal needs associated with them including the automotive, media and leisure industries.

We provide commercial, intellectual property, and technology legal advice and support to clients of all sizes from start up businesses/companies and established service providers. Clients' business interests include outsourcing and systems development, IT services contracts, licensing and distribution, software development, licensing and hosting and support services. We have also acted for creative clients including web designers and media developers.

Additionally, we have advised extensively on internet and e-commerce and all related contractual documents (including the application of the Distance Selling Regulations). As well as working with clients on establishing on-line trading systems and delivery and support of software and contractual documentation online.

Linked to advising technology clients comes complimentary advice on data protection and disaster recovery arrangements.

We have a close working relationship with other specialists in this field (eg patent/trade mark attorneys).
